The cheapest energy comes from coal, which is very polluting, but necessary for economic growth. Do you think the price of poorer health, farmland, and general environment is too high to pay for prosperity? What is your opinion?

写作范文 We Should Reduce Our Dependency on Coal

Accounting for 70 percent of China's energy supply, coal has fueled China's economy. However, as an extremely dirty source of power, coal imposes huge costs on people's health and general environment. As far as I am concerned, the cost is too high.

Firstly, deterioration of the environment and people's health will in turn halt economic growth. The environment, as a source-provider, exerts direct influence on economic production, and is closely related to the living standards, health condition and longevity of people. Once certain damage is done, we will have to suffer from the horrendous consequences. The "retaliation" of nature comes in forms of resource exhaustion, water and soil erosion, natural disasters and so forth. In this situation, the economy is certain to be affected. The overuse of coal, which will finally yield severe results, is a perfect example. Secondly, economic development should not sacrifice people's health and the environment. It is the government's responsibility to ensure a good environment for the sake of people's health. Unfortunately, coal induces considerable environmental hazards which can be noticed at local and global level.

"Prosperity" is a state when a society is socially and environmentally thriving, not just confined to economic growth. Therefore, we should reduce coal dependency and move towards a future where energy supply is both environmentally friendly and sustainable, (218 words)

02、写作题目：水污染

Water pollution is now a serious problem in the world threatening animals and plants as well as humans. Suggest ONE way to deal with the problem.

写作范文：Increase Public Awareness of Water Pollution

Many developing countries are seeing a rapid rise in water pollution so severe that densely crowded cities could be left without adequate safe supplies. As for how to combat water pollution, the most effective way should be by strengthening supervisory policies.

Firstly, supervision promotes public awareness of water conservation and protection. Let us take agricultural waste-water as an example. Pesticides and chemical fertilizers are the main contaminants in agricultural production. In fact, farmers are less aware of water conservation compared with more water-conscious urban residents. Therefore, education-oriented supervision should be adopted by the local authorities. Furthermore, tough measures have to be taken against illegal industrial waste-water discharge. Strict standards must be set. Industries which cannot meet certain criteria need to bear legal liability. The government and the public, especially direct interest groups, need to join up supervisors. Mutual supervision between enterprises is also worth consideration under certain circumstances. When it comes to domestic sewage, self-supervision and community publicity may be the answer. For individuals, self-awareness is the most important factor in combating water pollution, which can be acquired through local and national advertising campaigns.

In conclusion, the strengthening of supervision serves as an effective solution to water pollution. The government should make unremitting efforts to adopt supervision strategies in an attempt to prevent water pollution. (216 words)

03、写作题目：土壤污染

In some parts of the world, polluted land is a big problem. Land pollution can affect wildlife, plants, and humans in a number of ways. Suggest ONE way to reduce land pollution.

写作范文：Impose Strict Standards on Industries

Some parts of the world face grave soil pollution that jeopardizes the ecology, food safety, people's health and a sustainable social development. The long-term effect of land pollution has become a cause for concern by the public in general. In my opinion, strict regulations and standards for industry should be adopted in order to prevent land pollution.

Firstly, as a matter of fact, industrial pollutants account for more than 80% of the land pollution which is now causing us huge problems in every aspect of our lives. By setting strict standards on industries, we could effectively deter relative factories from producing industrial pollutants. For example, the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro marked a paradigm shift in the attitude of the governments of the world, as 150 delegates attended and recognized the importance of control and discipline. Secondly, when governments make the new standards for those leading industries and with people in every corner of the world benefiting from it, small business owners and entrepreneurs will also be positively involved and possibly stay engaged with the process of reducing land pollution.

To conclude, I am fully convinced by what is argued above that for the sake of ourselves and the generations to come, strict relative relations and standards for industry should be immediately adopted in order to prevent land pollution once and for all. (224words)

04、题目：先工作还是先上研究生

Many senior year students face the choice of either getting a job after graduation or continuing their postgraduate study. To become a postgraduate or an employee? Career or degree? Every graduate's decision. Which would you prefer?

写作范文：Get a Job First

It is inevitable that most senior students have to choose between pursuing their studies and seeking employment in a certain field. Personally, I prefer to procure a job first after graduation.

To begin with, the current trend is that hands-on experience is as important as a degree if not even more so. Especially in dynamic subjects like business, international trade and journalism, employers tend to place more focus on experience than academic performance. This point can be illustrated by the fact that most companies require their new employees to have a certain amount of work experience. In addition, even with students who intend to further their study, knowledge learn at work can help them decide what their focus should be. Otherwise, students enrolled in a postgraduate programme may have to face the challenge of not knowing what his strengths are. Last, students generally speaking can benefit more from a master's programme when they can relate the knowledge back to tasks at work. In this way, instead of being confined in a pure academic environment, students can actually apply the knowledge learn in class to real situations, which is undoubtedly the ultimate aim of higher education.

In conclusion, I believe that graduates should gain work experience first before embarking on postgraduate studies. (211 words)

05、写作题目：成人教育

Today, more and more adults are spending their leisure time trying to improve themselves by going back to college or taking special courses in subjects which they are interested in. What is your view on the importance of adult education?

写作范文：The Importance of Adult Education

Many people in the workforce are unhappy with their current salaries or career and consider a change or a betterment of their lives through discovering new avenues of industry. Adult education is on the rise. I personally hold that adult education is highly advisable and completely achievable³ and therefore is highly important.

Firstly, adults starting a new or returning to school most often have found within themselves strengthened desire to succeed. Studies have shown that 80% of adult students graduate as compared to a 50% average graduation rate among traditional students. Furthermore, adults have a bank of knowledge from life or work experience that can contribute to what they will learn in school. This is a fantastic advantage over their younger peers. Adults also view their professors as peers and are less intimidated by them. Last but not least, higher education for the adult is a life-changing experience. Most often, adults go to school to further their education in hopes of salary increases, chances for promotion, or they go to school for change, hoping to enter into a better field or pursue a field that they have a deep-rooted passion for.

In conclusion, the importance of having adult education overshadows the difficulties in pursuing your degree later in life. Given that most colleges and universities have tailored their programs to fit adult student's needs and schedules, going back to school for adult education is feasible and highly advisable. 06、写作题目：所有公共场所都应该禁止吸烟吗？

Cigarette smoke contains about 4,000 chemicals, about 50 of which are known cancer-causing agents. Some people hold that smoking should be banned in all public places for the sake of health. Do you agree?

写作范文：Smoking Should Be Banned in All Public Places

Shocked by the fact that nearly half of the country's 1.3 billion population are suffering from passive smoking, a Chinese lawmaker has called for national legislation to ban smoking in public places. Given the harmful effects of smoking, I hold that smoking should be banned in all public places.

Firstly, smoking is a greater cause of death and disability than any single disease, says the World Health Organization. Tobacco smoking is a known or probable cause of approximately 25 diseases. Besides, second-hand smoke puts people's health at risk too. According to a survey, nearly 600 million Chinese suffer from passive smoking, which occurs in 32.5 per cent of public spaces. People visiting smoky public places two or three times a week and those working in the hospitality industry are at high risk of smoking-related diseases, such as cancer, heart disease and amputated limbs arising from vein clogging. Therefore, except for increasing their own risk of smoking-related diseases, smokers also pose a danger to non-smokers' health due to second-hand smoke. It is a non-smoker's right not to have to breathe in smoke in public places. There is nothing worse than someone smoking at the table next to you while you're trying to enjoy your meal. The government should get tough on smoking so as to protect nonsmokers' rights to a healthy life.

In summary, it is imperative to create a non-smoking social environment and enhance the self-protection awareness of non-smokers. Smoking in public areas should be banned. (246 words)

07、写作题目：财富和成功

Some people believe that only material wealth is assign of success while others hold that wealth alone cannot be the measure of success. Which view do you agree with?

写作范文：Money Is Not Everything

Does contemporary society gauge one's achievements merely according to how much money one possesses? Or are there alternative means to determine whether one is successful or not? Personally, I agree with the latter though I concede that money does account for something.

Admittedly, success would be a straightforward matter if it is entirely based on monetary terms. And money does provide various conveniences which render life much more comfortable. No one can deny that a poverty-stricken life mostly is not a successful one. However, money is by no means the only device to calibrate one's achievements. There are many wealthy people who are also selfish and even unscrupulous; they accumulate their wealth by exploiting others or through other devious means. In contrast, there are also a large number of people who have made a significant contribution to society even though they are not all that rich. Furthermore, if our society condones the notion that money is of paramount importance and should be obtained at the expense of integrity, honesty and other time-honoured values, then moral corruption is inevitable which will result in dire consequences.

In summary granted, money is important and even constitutes a crucial element of our society. Yet, success entails a myriad of different aspects and should be gauged not solely by one's monetary possessions. (218 words)

08、写作题目：宠物

Keeping pets has seemed to be in vogue for the last few years. Some people say that owners of pets only have them because they are a status symbol while others say that keeping a pet encourages people to know, care about and show love to animals. Which view do you agree with?

高分范文：Keeping a Pet Is Good for You

Anyone who has ever loved a pet knows how much joy that relationship can bring. There is increasing scientific evidence that the unique bond we share with our pets dramatically enriches our lives, and improves our physical health and emotional well-being. Personally I hold that keeping a pet yields more benefits than drawbacks.

Firstly, keeping a pet contributes to our general health and well-being. Loving and caring for a pet can help anyone fight depression and loneliness, since the bond with a pet helps you maintain a sense of purpose in life. A daily walk with a dog gets you out into the world on a regular basis and encourages exercise, both of which help counteract feelings of depression. Pets can be a great comfort in times of conflict or grief, since they offer unconditional affections. They often seem to know when we are sad, and they are always attentive, nonjudgemental listeners. Therefore, by reducing our stress, relieving our loneliness and depression, pets can help us prevent heart disease and improve our general well-being. Secondly, keeping a pet can teach children a sense of empathy and responsibility. Taking care of a pet encourages children to care for animals and nurture responsibilities over them. Being praised as a means of aiding the personality development of children, pet-keeping is essential for children's health development.

In conclusion, having a pet contributes towards a person's well-being and promotes a sense of responsibility and caring towards animals among children. (245 words)

08、写作题目：传统文化

With the fast pace of globalization many aspects of Western culture are spreading all over the world and while most of these are good some people say that there might be a threat towards China's traditional culture. What is your opinion about the importance of retaining our traditional culture?

写作范文：The Importance of Traditional Culture

With the rapid onset of globalization there is a danger of standardization where you would find businesses like Starbucks and MacDonald's everywhere replacing local companies and customs. I believe that while people generally, and specifically young people, welcome the new there is great importance in preserving and promoting traditional culture.

First, traditional Chinese culture such as martial arts, Peking opera, Chinese calligraphy, tea culture, etc., have long been the common heritage of the Chinese people and have contributed towards a sense of national unity and pride, With the entry of China into the WTO and its emergence as a strong economic and trading force there has been a growing worldwide interest in China's history and culture. To meet this need the government has set up over 100 Confucius Institutes abroad to showcase China's cultural heritage, Second, the government has recognized the importance of traditional Chinese festivals by shortening the May holidays and reintroducing ancient festivals such as Tomb Sweeping Day, and Dragon Boat Festival, These holidays help to remind people of a need to respect one's ancestors and to remember great heroes of the past. In conclusion, the development of Confucius Institutes abroad and the promotion of traditional Chinese festivals at home have emphasized the growing importance of traditional Chinese culture and its relevance today, (215 words)

09、写作题目：经验还是书本知识

It has been said that "Not everything that is learned is contained in books." Some people think that experience teaches more than books. In your opinion, which is more important-experience or books?

写作范文：The Importance of Experience

Should experience be credited with more importance than books as some people claim? Or do books still play a pivotal role in the learning process? Given my personal experience, I agree with the former.

Admittedly, students can learn all the necessary principles or theorems through textbooks. And a high-quality book should contain the essence of a certain subject, The importance of books is corroborated by the fact that almost all learning institutions employ textbooks to disseminate knowledge. Nonetheless, one should not belittle the significance of hands-on experience. In some circumstances, experience may count more than books and this trend is gradually gaining ascendancy. It makes sense that employers expect their prospective staff to acquire some experience so that they do not have to learn from scratch. In addition, it is true to assert that there are a myriad of things which cannot be learned simply by reading a book, The underpinning goal of any education is to impart knowledge and to cultivate the ability to apply the knowledge to a real-life situation. Principles learned from books amount to almost nothing if students cannot use them to solve problems they encounter in their jobs. Finally, it is undeniable that books are a useful device in terms of conveying knowledge; however, the importance of experience should not be underrated either.

On balance, I believe that books and experience actually complement each other: knowledge learned through books will be effectively reinforced by the accumulation of experience. (243 words)
